SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

In an attempt to avoid responsibility for breaching its obligations under a clear oral contract supported by the actual payment of $6 million, Gap distorts the factual record and advances a series of legal arguments that ask the court to blind itself to the underlying business and economic reality. Three witnesses (one of whom was the president of Gabana at the time of the deal) testified to the exact same business deal between Gap and Roots: Roots would pay $6 million for out-of-date and defective Gap merchandise and receive in return the right to sell first-line Gap merchandise in the Arabic-speaking countries of the Middle East and North Africa.

Gap chose to implement the deal through Gabana, a British shell company with no garment industry experience, no presence in the Middle East, no assets, no distribution network, and only one professional employee, a former banker based in a small office in Switzerland. Gap itself called Gabana a “mom and pop operation,” and no one involved in the deal seriously believed that Gabana was anything more than a pass through entity for the transaction between Gap and Roots. Roots accepted Gap’s offer, by making a required $1 million down payment.

Gap’s main excuse for avoiding its bargained for responsibilities to Roots is to argue that the written agreements Gap entered with Gabana to document its role as an intermediary – contracts Roots did not negotiate, and never even saw before performing under its agreement with Gap – bars Roots claims. But the fact record shows that Francois Larsen and Gabana did not act as the agents of Roots in the negotiation of Gabana’s agreement with Gap, and that Roots knowledge of the negotiation was limited to a few conversations. When Roots actually saw the Gabana contract, it immediately recognized that it did not capture its agreement with Gap and refused to sign a mirror agreement. Over a two-year period, all the parties performed precisely in accordance with the oral agreement. Under these circumstances, the effort to avoid the oral contract by virtue of the parol evidence rule is simply contradicted by the facts. Moreover, the evidence shows Gap itself interpreted the Gabana contract to permit Roots to resell merchandise, contradicting the basic premise of Gap’s parol evidence analysis that Roots acting as a distributor was inconsistent with the Gabana agreement.

1 Gap's other attempts to overcome Roots' contract claims also fail. The record demonstrates 2 that the essential elements of both contracts at issue were agreed to by the parties or supplied by 3 subsequent performance. Gap is estopped from asserting a statute of frauds defense because it
4 induced Roots "seriously to change its position" in reliance on the existence of the oral agreements.
5 The record also establishes a claim for fraud because Gap's promises to grant Roots ISP – and later
6 franchise – rights were false when made, and because Gap mislead Roots concerning the purpose
7 of the ISP program. Gap offers no serious argument for dismissal of Roots' statutory claim for 8 "unfair" business practices. Contrary to Gap's argument, this broad equitable claim is not 9 derivative of Roots' tort and contract claims, and should be sustained even if the other claims are 10 dismissed.

11 For all of these reasons, and others discussed below, Gap's Motion for Summary Judgment 12 should be denied.

FACTUAL BACKGROUND

I. Gap Seeks To Liquidate 1.7 Million Pieces of Excess Inventory.

This action arises from Gap's¹ almost desperate efforts to rid itself of a large inventory of outdated "excess inventory," also known as "OP" for "overproduction,"

Exh. A, 177:11-18.²

Exh. B, 99:18-24.

Exh. A 65:22-66:1.

In 2001, Gap transferred a large volume of OP inventory to a French company, Solka S.A. (“Solka”). Exh. C, 17:3-19:4. Gap sent the inventory to Solka on an open account basis, without requiring immediate payment. Id., 18:6-19:4. After attempting with limited success to liquidate the inventory, Solka was left with approximately 1.7 million pieces stored in Dubai, United Arab Emirates. Id., 20:4-14. Following a change in Gap’s management, in 2002, Gap demanded that Solka pay immediately for the remaining inventory. Id., 22:2-22. [REDACTED]

Exh. D, 22:17-20. Gap requested that Solka keep the goods until another purchaser could be identified, rather than return them to Gap. Exh. C., 23:6-10.

A. Solka and Gabana Identify Roots As A Potential Purchaser of the Dubai OP Inventory.

Solka retained Francois Larsen, a Swiss national with an accounting and finance background, to assist with the transaction relating to the OP inventory. Larsen is the principal of Gabana Gulf Distribution (“Gabana”) – a shell company registered in the United Kingdom, with its principal place of business in Geneva, Switzerland. Gabana had no employees other than Mr. Larsen and a secretary. Id., 32:25-33-2. Larsen himself had no experience in the garment industry. 33:11-13. When asked whether Gabana had any facilities in the Middle East, Solka’s principal, Jacques Fabre, who at one point served as the President of Gabana, responded as follows:

² All Exhibits cited herein are exhibits to the accompanying Declaration of Bradley J. Nash, unless otherwise stated.

1 “A. (Laughs). No. . . . They had an office in Geneva, but that’s all.” Id., 33:7-10. When asked
 2 whether Mr. Larsen had any expertise selling garments in the Middle East, Mr. Fabre was similarly
 3 unequivocal: “A. (Laughs). We are wasting . . . time. No.” Id., 28:1-2. [REDACTED]

Exh. B, 27:5-8.

8 Exh. E, 47:1-10. [REDACTED] Exh. F, 10:8. Roots’ CEO was 9 Ashraf Abu Issa, a respected retail executive in Qatar. Abu Issa Decl. ¶ 1. [REDACTED]

10 [REDACTED] Exh. E, 47:2-6. Roots was initially unwilling
 11 to purchase such a large volume outdated garments. Abu Issa Decl. ¶¶ 2-3; Exh. F, 142:20-24.
 12 Larsen indicated that if Roots purchased the OP inventory, Gap would grant Roots the right to sell
 13 first-line merchandise in the Middle East under Gap’s International Sales Program (“ISP”). Abu 14 Issa Decl. ¶ 3.

15 B. Gap Offers to Grant Roots The Right to Sell First-Line Gap Merchandise If Roots Purchases the Dubai OP Inventory For $6 Million.

16 Larsen arranged for Al-Thani and Abu Issa to speak by phone with Jim Bell, the director of 17 Gap’s outlet division, who was responsible for disposing of the enormous stock of excess
 18 inventory. During an hour-long call, Bell conveyed directly to Roots Gap’s offer to sell the OP
 19 inventory. [REDACTED]

20 [REDACTED] Exh. E, 44:19, 47:11-48:3; accord Exh. F, 130:23-

21 24; Exh. C, 24:2-3. [REDACTED]

22 [REDACTED] Exh. E, 47:20-23.

23 Several other negotiation sessions followed, during which Roots and Gap negotiated the 24 terms of Gap’s offer, including (1) the price for the OP merchandise, (2) the terms of the letter of 25 credit by which Roots would pay for the merchandise; (3) the brands Roots would sell under the 26 ISP program; (4) the countries that Roots would be allowed to sell in; (5) the environment in which 27

1 Roots would sell the merchandise (i.e., in multi-brand stores); and (6) the “mechanism” for placing 2 orders. Abu Issa Decl. ¶ 5; Exh. E, 43:23–44:13; 49:20–50:22.

3 The negotiated price, $6 million, exceeded the market value of the OP inventory. Abu Issa
 4 Decl. ¶ 5. To induce Roots to make the purchase, Bell presented the ISP program as a tremendous 5 opportunity that, over time, would enable Roots to recoup its substantial investment in the OP
 6 inventory. Abu Issa Decl. ¶ 6. According to Bell, Roots would be permitted to sell ISP
 7 merchandise both in Roots’ own multi-brand stores in Qatar, and in other Arabic-speaking
 8 countries in the Middle East and North Africa, subject only to Gap’s approval of specific retailers

 23 arrangement, but only with the understanding that it would in no way extinguish or modify Gap’s
 24 promises to Roots. Id.

25 On May 12, 2003, Roots and Gabana executed a letter of understanding (“LOU”). Punak

16 On May 14, 2003 – the day after the execution of the Gap-Gabana agreements, and after 17 being reassured that the terms of the oral agreement were still in effect – Roots accepted Jim Bell’s
 18 offer by tendering a $1 million down payment toward the purchase of the OP inventory. Abu Issa

 20 simultaneously transferred the identical amount to Gap. Exh. G; Exh. H. Gap was aware of, and 21 indeed requested, this method of payment. Abu Issa Decl. ¶ 14. As Gap was aware, Gabana did

 6 terms differed the terms Roots had negotiated with Gap. Id. For example, the rights Gap granted
 7 to Gabana were non-exclusive, and the agreements contained strict advertising restrictions that Abu
 8 Issa believed would hamper efforts to sell the merchandise. Id. Mr. Abu Issa discussed these 9 concerns with Jim Bell. Id. ¶ 16. Bell represented that the Gap-Gabana agreements were only 10 "temporary" and that the terms could be improved in the future. Id. Roots did not execute the 11 back-to-back agreements with Gabana that were contemplated by the LOU, choosing instead to 12 rely on its separate agreement with Gap. Id. ¶ 16; Exh. E, 69:1-21.

13 In the meantime, Bell assured Abu Issa that the oral agreement between Roots and Gap
 14 remained in effect. Id. He further stated that Roots was not bound by the terms of the written 15 agreements, and could rely instead on Gap's oral offer. Id. In reliance on Bell's representations,
 16 Roots paid the remaining $5 million balance of the purchase price by means of back-to-back letters
 17 of credit from Roots to Gabana and Gabana to Gap. Exh. J; Exh. K. As with the down payment,

3 F. Gap and Roots Perform In A Manner Consistent With The Terms of the Oral 4 Agreements.

5 In the two years following Roots' purchase of the OP inventory, Gap and Roots performed
6 in a manner consistent with the oral agreement, demonstrating the parties' intent that Roots would 7 function as a distributor of Gap merchandise in the Arabic-speaking countries of the Middle East
8 and North Africa.

9 Roots, with Gap's approval open two multi-brand stores in Doha, Qatar, which began
10 selling ISP and OP merchandise in 2004. Although Gap now asserts that Roots resale of ISP 11 merchandise to other retailers contradicts the terms of the Gap-Gabana agreements, Defs. Mem. at 12 6, 13, it never took that position prior to this litigation. To the contrary, Gap (i) shipped the entire 13 OP inventory, and later ISP merchandise, to Roots' warehouse in Dubai for distribution in various 14 territories; (ii) approved Roots' resale of OP and ISP merchandise to other approved retailers; and 15 (iii) routinely had discussions with Roots about expanding Roots' ISP sales to retailers in territories

ARGUMENT

Summary judgment is proper only when a review of the record reveals “no genuine issue as to any material fact.” Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c). “Reasonable doubts as to the existence of material factual issue are resolved against the moving party and inferences are drawn in the light most favorable to the non-moving party.” Addisu v. Fred Meyer, Inc., 198 F.3d 1130, 1134 (9th Cir. 2000). So long as “a fair-minded jury could return a verdict for the plaintiff on the evidence presented,” a defendant’s summary judgment motion must be denied. Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 252 (1986).

I. The Record Supports Roots' First Contract Claim.

A. The Evidence Establishes That Roots and Gap Entered Into A Binding Contract on May 14, 2003.

1. The Parties Manifested Their Intent To Be Bound When Gap Accepted Roots' Down Payment for the OP Inventory.

The record establishes that Gap and Roots entered into a binding oral contract on May 14, 2003 when Roots tendered, and Gap accepted, payment for the OP inventory. Gap's argument that Roots' negotiations with Gap in May 2003 did not result in an oral agreement, as "[n]either Roots nor Gap viewed the conversations . . . as constituting a binding contract" is beside the point.

Exh. E, 62:1-12

, 145:5-12

see also Exh. F, 131:13-

Under California law, “[p]erformance of the conditions of a proposal . . . is an acceptance of the proposal,” Cal. Civ. Code § 1584, and gives rise to a binding contract. See Los Angeles Traction Co v. Wilshire, 135 Cal. 654, 658-659 (1902) (offeror’s promise to perform if the offeree will perform a particular act becomes binding when the offeree, in reliance on such a promise, does the required act). By accepting Roots’ payment for the OP inventory, Gap manifested its assent to be bound by the terms of its offer to Roots. See Snider v. Roadway Packaging Systems, No. C-99-02728 CRB, 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4688 at *9 (N.D. Cal. Apr. 11, 2000) (“Mutual assent is typically manifested by means of the communication of an offer and an acceptance between the parties.”).

2. The Material Terms of the May 2003 Oral Contract Are Clear.

Gap contends that the May 2003 agreement failed to “address and/or resolve material terms” and is therefore too “indefinite” to constitute a binding agreement. Defs. Mem. at 15. This argument fails because: (1) the May 2003 agreement contained all the material terms; and (2) any arguable “indefiniteness” was cured by the parties’ performance.

The essential terms of the oral agreement were expressly delineated in Gap’s offer to Roots, including: the price Roots would be required to pay for the OP inventory ($6 million); the consideration Roots would receive in exchange for the purchase (i.e., the right to sell first-line ISP merchandise); and the territories to which those rights applied (all the Arabic-speaking countries). Abu Issa Decl. ¶ 5. The cases cited by Gap in which courts found that the alleged agreements failed for lack of definite terms bear no resemblance to the oral agreement between Roots and Gap.⁵

⁵ For example, the agreements at issue in Weddington Prods. v. Flick, 60 Cal. App. 4th 793 (1998), and Avalon Products, Inc. v. Lentini, 98 Cal. App. 2d 177 (1950), unlike the oral contract here, expressly left material terms subject to future negotiation and agreement. In Weisberg v. U.S. Dep’t of Justice, 745 F.2d 1476, 1493 (D.C. Cir. 1984), the court found that the absence of a duration term rendered an alleged consultancy agreement fatally uncertain. Central to

1 Even if certain terms of the agreement remained indefinite following the negotiations, such 2 deficiencies were cured by the parties' performance. “[A]lthough an agreement may be indefinite
 3 or uncertain in its inception, subsequent performance by the parties under the agreement will cure
 4 this defect and render it enforceable.” Bohman v. Berg, 54 Cal. 2d 787, 794-795 (1960) (internal
 5 citations omitted); see also Williston on Contracts § 4:11 (4th Ed.) (“even if the oral agreement
 6 prior to the act of performance did not constitute a contract, the subsequent tender of performance 7 would amount to an offer, and the receipt of such performance without objection would operate as 8 an acceptance of the offer”). Thus, Roots’ payment of $6 million, Gap’s acceptance of the 9 payment and subsequent shipment of the OP Inventory directly to Roots’ warehouse, and both
 10 parties’ two-year course of performance during which both Gap and Roots performed in a manner 11 consistent with the oral agreement (see supra at 6-8), clearly establish the existence of an 12 enforceable agreement.

13 B. Roots Is Not Bound By the Written Agreements Between Gap and Gabana.

14 1. Roots’ Rights Are Not Derivative of the Gap-Gabana Agreements.

15 Through selective citations to the record, Gap argues that Roots’ rights with respect to Gap 16 merchandise derive from Gap’s written agreements with Gabana. Defs. Mem. at 10. Gap simply 17 ignores the extensive testimony demonstrating that Roots traced its rights to a separate oral
 18 agreement with Gap. [REDACTED]

19 [REDACTED]
 20 [REDACTED] Exh. E, 127:5-8.

21 [REDACTED] Exh. F, 84:7-9

22 [REDACTED] Id., 82:5-6.

23 Although, the parties initially intended to execute a back-to-back written contracts between 24 Gap and Gabana and Gabana and Roots, the LOU between Roots and Gabana was never 25 implement, and Roots never executed a written agreement with Gabana. Abu Issa Decl. ¶ 10.

26 the holding, however, was the fact that the plaintiff claimed that he was entitled to be paid by the 27 hour, and therefore the total amount of his consultancy fee – which had been the central focus of 28 the parties’ negotiations – could not be determined without a duration term.

1 Instead, after receiving assurances from Jim Bell that Gap's oral offer to Roots was in place – i.e.,
 2 that Roots would receive ISP rights in the Arabic-speaking countries in exchange for purchasing
 3 the OP inventory – Roots accepted the offer by making a $1 million down payment toward the 4 purchase of the OP inventory, and later paying the remaining $5 million balance. Abu Issa Decl. ¶
 5 14. Gap wrests entirely out of context a statement in one of Roots' agreements to the effect that 6 "Roots manages rights granted to Gabana Gulf Distribution . . . by GAP Inc," arguing that this 7 shows Roots understood its rights to be derivative of Gabana.

8 [REDACTED]

10 [REDACTED] Exh. U, 119:14–120:9.

11 2. Larsen Had No Authority To Modify The Terms of Gap's Agreement
 12 With Roots.

13 Gap asserts that Francois Larsen had actual or ostensible authority to modify Gap's
 14 agreement with Roots by executing a written agreement between Gap and Gabana. Neither theory 15 is supported by the record.

16 "Agency is the relationship which results from the manifestation of consent by one person 17 to another that the other shall act on his behalf and subject to his control." Van't Rood v. County of 18 Santa Clara, 113 Cal. App. 4th 549, 571 (2003). There is no evidence in the record that Roots
 19 conferred upon Larsen the authority to act on its behalf. According to Abu Issa, there was "never 20 any agreement that [Larsen] would act as an agent of Roots." Abu Issa Decl. ¶ 13. The testimony
 21 cited by Gap, Defs. Mem. at 11, at most shows that Larsen occasionally functioned as a 22 "messenger" during the parties' negotiations by conveying information between Roots and Gap.
 23 Exh. E, 109:22-23. However, there is no evidence that Roots ever possessed the right to control
 24 Larsen's actions.

25 [REDACTED] Id., 36:16-18. Van't Rood, 113 Cal. App. 4th at 572 ("[I]n the 26 absence of the essential characteristic of the right to control, there is no true agency. . .") (internal 27

1 quotations omitted); see also DeSuza v. Andersack, 63 Cal. App. 3d 694, 699 (1976) (finding no
 2 agency where neither party was “asserting the right to control the other”).

3 Nor was Larsen “imbued with ostensible authority,” Defs. Mem. at 12, to bind Roots to 4 any agreement that would limit its rights. In order to establish ostensible authority, the principal 5 must intentionally communicate the existence of an agency relationship to a third person, or 6 negligently cause a third person to believe that there is an agency relationship. See Howell v.
 7 Courtesy Chevrolet, Inc. 94 Cal. Rptr. 33 (1971). Gap argues that “Abu Issa was aware in May 8 2003 that Larsen had represented to Gap that Roots’ principals . . . were 49% owners in Gabana,” 9 and therefore “Gap had no reason to believe that Larsen lacked authority to enter into written 10 agreements that would affect Roots’ rights.” Defs. Mem. at 12. (emphasis added). This is 11 incorrect. Abu Issa testified that he was aware Larsen informed Gap that the ownership of Gabana 12 “would be changed” following a proposed merger with Roots. But the merger never occurred, and 13 Roots never represented to Gap that it had. Gap continued to deal independently with Gabana and 14 Roots, recognizing that they were two separate entities. Abu Issa Decl. ¶ 11. In any event,
 15 Larsen’s representations to Gap are irrelevant to the question of ostensible agency, as the conduct 16 of the purported agent cannot not establish agency. See Mosesian v. Bagdasarian, 260 Cal. App.
 17 2d 361, 367 (1968).⁶

18 C. The Evidence Shows That Parol Evidence Rule Has No Application In This Case.

19 Gap’s argument that the evidence of Roots’ oral contract is inadmissible under the parol 20 evidence rule fails for three separate reasons: (1) the parol evidence rule is inapplicable under the 21 established facts; (2) there is no inconsistency between the oral contract and the Gap-Gabana
 22 agreements as interpreted by Gap; and (3) Gap is estopped from enforcing the Gap-Gabana in a 23 manner that would prejudice Roots’ rights.

24 1. The Parole Evidence Does Not Apply Because Roots Is Not A Party to the Gap-Gabana Agreements.

26
 27 ⁶ At a minimum, “ostensible authority is for a trier of fact to resolve.... [It] should not ...
 [be] decided by an order granting a summary judgment.” American Cas. Co. of Reading,
Pennsylvania v. Krieger, 181 F. 3d 1113 (9th Cir. 1999) (internal quotations omitted).

1 Whether and under what circumstances the parol evidence rule can be invoked by or 2 against a non-party is an unresolved question under California law. See, e.g., Hess v. Ford Motor
 3 Co., 27 Cal. 4th 516, 526 n.2 (2002) (declining to “reach the issue of whether a stranger to the 4 contract may invoke the parol evidence rule.”) Some cases suggest that the rule precludes a non-
 5 party from introducing evidence to alter or vary the terms of a written agreement. Roots, however,
 6 does not seek to alter, interpret, or enforce the Gap-Gabana Agreements; it brings a claim for 7 breach of a separate oral contract between Roots and Gap. Gap cannot cite a single case that would 8 permit it to avoid obligations under an oral contract by the simple expedient of entering into a 9 written contract with a third party on the same subject matter.

10 The principal case applying the parol evidence rule to a non-party, Kern County Water
 11 Agency v. Belridge Water Storage Dist., 18 Cal. App. 4th 77 (1993), is readily distinguishable and 12 does not support the application of the doctrine in this action. In Kern County, a county water 13 agency brought a declaratory relief action to resolve a dispute with its 14 member water districts
 14 concerning an amendment to a master water supply contract between the agency and the state,
 15 which was incorporated by reference in agreements between the agency and each of the member 16 districts.

17 On the basis of the parol evidence rule, the trial court sustained the objection of two 18 districts to extrinsic evidence offered by the other districts as to the parties’ intent with respect to 19 the amendment. The Court of Appeals affirmed, holding that, although the extrinsic evidence that 20 the two districts sought to exclude technically pertained to contracts between other districts and the 21 agency, “the facts of this case strongly support the power of any member district to invoke the 22 parol evidence rule.” Id. at 87. In so finding, the Court noted that the amendment as to which the 23 two districts sought to introduce extrinsic evidence was incorporated by reference into the 24 agreements of all of the member districts. As a result, “[t]he trial court could not interpret one 25 member district’s contract without affecting the contractual rights and obligations of all parties.”
 26 Id. Here, by contrast, Roots is not a party to the Gap-Gabana agreements; the agreements are not

1 identical to the agreement between Roots and Gap; and admitting evidence of Roots' oral
 2 agreement with Gap will not affect the interpretation of the Gap-Gabana agreements.

3 2. The Parol Evidence Rule Is Inapposite Because The Gap-Gabana Agreements Do Not Contradict Gap's Oral Agreement With Roots.

4 The parol evidence rule is inapplicable for the additional reason that Roots' oral contract is 5 not inconsistent with the Gap-Gabana agreements. Gap's obligations under its oral contracts
 6 included permitting Roots to sell first-line Gap apparel in its own retail stores. Abu Issa Decl. ¶ 5.
 7 Gap's termination of the ISP Agreement – and its subsequent failure to provide first-line
 8 merchandise to Roots by other means – constituted a breach of this contractual obligation. Gap
 9 does not suggest that this part of Roots' contract claim is in any way inconsistent with the Gap-
 10 Gabana agreements.

11 As for Roots' claim that it had the contractual right to resell OP and ISP merchandise
 12 outside of Qatar, Gap points to no provision of the Gap-Gabana agreements that expressly
 13 prohibited Roots, as an authorized retailer, from reselling such merchandise to other Gap-approved
 14 retailers for sale in authorized stores. Gap's two-year course of performance under the agreements
 15 demonstrates that Gap understood Roots' role as a retailer to include not only sales to consumers
 16 but also sales to other retailers. For example, [REDACTED]

17 [REDACTED]

18 [REDACTED]

19 [REDACTED] See supra at 7; Nanakuli Paving & Rock Co. v. Shell Oil Co., 664 F.2d 772, 20 785 (9th Cir. 1981) ("actual performance of a contract" is "the most relevant evidence of how the 21 parties interpreted the terms of that contract.").

22 3. Gap Is Estopped From Asserting An Interpretation Of The Gap-Gabana Agreements that Prejudices Roots' Rights.

23 Even if the Gap-Gabana contracts could be interpreted in a manner prejudicial to Roots'
 24 rights, Gap is estopped from asserting that interpretation. "Whenever a party has, by his own
 25 statement or conduct, intentionally and deliberately led another to believe a particular thing true
 26 and to act upon such belief, he is not, in any litigation arising out of such statement or conduct,
 27

1 permitted to contradict it.” Cal. Evid. Code § 623. By its conduct and affirmative representations
 2 over the course of a two-year business relationship, Gap deliberately induced Roots to expend
 3 considerable money and resources in reliance on the promise that Roots was entitled to purchase
 4 first-line Gap merchandise from Gap (through Gabana) for re-sale (1) directly to consumers in 5 Roots own retail stores in Qatar and (2) to other Gap-approved retailers in other territories. Thus,
 6 even if the Gap-Gabana agreements somehow precluded Roots from re-selling Gap apparel to other
 7 retailers – and as explained above, they did not – the doctrine of estoppel would bar Gap from 8 enforcing this prohibition. See Wagner v. Glendale Adventist Med. Ctr., 216 Cal. App. 3d 1379,
 9 1388 (1989) (“When one party has, through oral representations and conduct or custom,
 10 subsequently behaved in a manner antithetical to one or more terms of an express written contract,
 11 he or she has induced the other party to rely on the representations and conduct or custom. In that 12 circumstance, it would be equally inequitable to deny the relying party the benefit of the other 13 party’s apparent modification of the written contract.”).

14 D. The Statute of Frauds Does Not Bar Roots Oral Contract Claims.

15 Gap is also estopped from raising a statute of frauds defense to Roots’ oral contract claims.
 16 Estoppel applies where the defendant induced the plaintiff “seriously to change his position in 17 reliance on the contract,” or where invalidating the contract would unjustly enrich the defendant.
 18 Monarco v. Lo Greco, 35 Cal.2d 621, 623 (1950); see also Allied Grape Growers v. Bronco Wine
 19 Co., 203 Cal. App. 3d 432, 442 (1988) (defendant equitably estopped from invoking statute of 20 limitations to invalidate an oral contract for the sale of grapes). Both elements are satisfied here.

21 Gap argues that Root has suffered no “unconscionable” injury, since “virtually all of the 22 alleged acts of reliance on Roots’ part occurred after it had received a copy of the Gap-Gabana 23 agreements and had been informed that the agreement did not include all of the terms it had hoped 24 for.” Defs. Mem. at 16. Gap ignores the fact that Roots had already paid a $1 million down
 25 payment toward the purchase of the OP inventory before it was shown a copy of the Gap-Gabana 26 agreements. Moreover, even after Roots saw the written agreements, Jim Bell confirmed that 27 Gap’s oral agreement with Roots remained in place. In reliance on the existence of the oral

1 agreement, Roots was further induced “seriously to change [its] position” by paying an additional 2 $5 million for the OP, and by proceeding to expend considerable money and resources developing 3 an ISP retail network. By the same token, Gap was unjustly enriched when it retained these and 4 other benefits Roots bestowed on it, while denying Roots the ISP rights it promised in exchange.

5 II. The Record Supports Roots’ Second Contract Claim.

6 The record establishes that Gap and Roots entered into a second oral agreement during a
 7 collection presentation in San Francisco in June 2003. Pursuant to that agreement, Gap promised
 8 to grant Roots ISP rights, if Roots would develop an ISP retail network in the Arabic-speaking
 9 world. See supra at 5-6. Roots performed under the contract by, inter alia, establishing a 10 warehouse, visiting “many countries” to explore potential markets, vetting numerous local retailers,
 11 and hiring a large staff. Exh. E, 197:1-23.

12 Gap argues that this claim, like the first oral contract claim is barred by statute of frauds,
 13 and the parol evidence rule, and is “fatally vague.” Each of these arguments fails for the reasons
 14 explained above at p. 11-12. Gap argues that the second oral contract claim lacks adequate
 15 consideration because, Gap had already promised to grant Roots ISP rights under the earlier
 16 contract in May. This court previously rejected a similar argument, when it found that there was “a 17 triable issue whether the promise to pay for Gap’s OP was intended to serve as consideration for 18 both the contract with Gabana and the contract with Gap.” 1/28/2008 Order at 6 n.1.

19 III. The Record Supports Roots Claim for Breach of the Covenant of Good Faith and 20 Fair Dealing.

21 “California law implies a covenant of good faith and fair dealing in every contract,” 22 including Roots’ oral contracts with Gap. Mundy v. Household Finance Corp., 885 F.2d 542, 544
 23 (9th Cir. 1989). Gap breached this implied covenant by, inter alia, (1) terminating Roots’ ISP
 24 rights (and failing to otherwise provide first-line merchandise to Roots for re-sale in the Middle 25 East) before Roots could reasonably have made a return on its substantial investment in the OP
 26 inventory; and (2) failing to consider in good faith Roots’ proposals to expand its ISP operations in 27 the territories that Gap promised to it. Exh. V, 111:6-113:1
 28 [REDACTED]

The record shows that Gap's conduct "unfairly interfered with [Roots'] right to receive the benefits of the contract," establishing a claim for breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing. See Oculus Innovative Sciences, Inc. v. Nofil Corp., No C 06-01686 SI, 2007 WL 2600746, at *4 (N.D. Cal. Sept. 10, 2007).

IV. The Record Supports Two Separate Claims for “Unfair” and “Unlawful” Practices Under Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200.

Gap’s assertion that both of Roots’ UCL claims are derivative of the contract and fraud counts is flatly contradicted by established law. A claim for “unfair” business practices does not require any underlying predicate violation of law. To the contrary, “a practice may be deemed unfair even if not specifically proscribed by some other law.” Blennis v. Hewlett-Packard Co., No. C 07-00333 JF, 2008 WL 818526, at *6 (N.D. Cal. Mar. 25, 2008) (citation omitted); see also Progressive W. Ins. Co. v. Yolo County Superior Court, 135 Cal. App. 4th 263, 286 (2005) (upholding 17200 claim for “unfair” business practices where complaint did not state a claim for breach of contract, or breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing).

“The determination of whether a particular business practice is unfair . . . involves an examination of its impact on its alleged victim, balanced against the reasons, justifications and motives of the alleged wrongdoer.” Motors, Inc. v. Times Mirror Co. 102 Cal. App. 3d 735, 740 (1980). The record establishes a basis for the claim: Gap induced Roots to purchase the OP inventory for an above-market price, and to expend money and resources liquidating the inventory and developing a retail network for Gap products in the Middle East, but then cut-off Roots’ ability to sell first-line Gap merchandise before it could even recoup its investment. Moreover, Gap had no legitimate business justification for its conduct: Its apparent motivation for was to rid itself of quickly of outdated merchandise that it viewed as a liability.

V. The Record Supports Roots' Common Law Fraud (Count Six)

The record demonstrates that Gap defrauded Roots by falsely promising to grant it distribution rights in the Middle East with no intent of doing so, and by failing to disclose material facts uniquely within Gap's knowledge concerning the ISP program.

1 Under California law, “where a promise is made without [the intention to perform], there is
 2 an implied misrepresentation of fact that may be actionable fraud.” See Lazar v. Superior Court,
 3 12 Cal. 4th 631, 638 (1996). The record shows that Gap promised to grant Roots ISP rights in the 4 Middle East, and later promised to make Roots a franchisee in the same territory.⁷ See supra
 5 at 2-3, 9. Gap’s own witness have admitted, however, that Gap never intended to grant Roots ISP
 6 rights, and never actually considered making Roots Gap’s franchise. See supra at 9. These 7 promises, which were false when made, are actionable as fraud.

8 Gap argues that any misrepresentations pre-dating the September 1, 2004 ISP Agreement –
 9 such as Bell’s false promise to grant Roots ISP rights – are barred by the parol evidence rule.
 10 Although a party to a contract may not assert a fraud claim based on “prior or contemporaneous
 11 statements at variance with the terms of a written integrated agreement,” 1/28/08 Order at 7, Roots 12 is not a party to the Gap-Gabana agreements. Accordingly, while Gabana may be barred from 13 asserting fraud claims at variance with the terms of its written agreement with Gap, Roots is not.
 14 To hold otherwise would allow any party to avoid liability for fraudulent promises to a party by 15 unilaterally executing a contract on the same subject matter with a different party. Moreover,
 16 Gap’s fraudulent promises to grant Roots the right to sell first-line Gap merchandise directly to 17 consumers in its own retail stores in Qatar and to Gap-approved retailers in other territories were 18 not inconsistent with the terms of the written agreements between Gap and Gabana. Thus, even if 19 the parol evidence rule did apply, it would not bar Roots’ fraud claim.

20 Even if the promise to grant Roots ISP rights had been true, Gap nevertheless defrauded
 21 Roots by presenting the program as “a tremendous opportunity for Roots to establish and grow a 22 profitable retail network for Gap merchandise in the Arabic-speaking world.” Abu Issa Decl. ¶ 6.
 23 Gap’s witnesses now concede that Gap actually regarded the program as “commercially
 24

25 ⁷ Gap’s suggestion that the promise to make Roots a franchisee was too “vague” or 26 “qualified” to be actionable, and that Roots cannot show detrimental reliance, are incorrect. Defs.
 27 Mem. at 21. Al-Thani testified that Young made an unequivocal promise that if Gap switched to a 28 franchise model, it would make Roots the franchisee in the same territories where Roots was entitled to distribute ISP. See supra at 9. In reliance on that promise, Roots prepared a market study, and also traveled extensively in the region to investigate potential markets. See id.

1 irrelevant.” The purpose of ISP was to protect Gap’s foreign trademarks, “not to drive revenue or 2 sales.” Exh. T, 16:10-22. Gap attempts to avoid liability by arguing that “the failure to disclose a
 3 fact does not constitute fraud unless the defendant is legally bound to disclose it.” Defs. Mem. at 4 20. However, “nondisclosure or concealment may constitute actionable fraud: . . . [1] when the 5 defendant had exclusive knowledge of material facts not known to the plaintiff . . . , or [2] when the 6 defendant makes partial representations but also suppresses some material facts.” LiMandri v.
 7 Judkins, 52 Cal. App. 4th 326, 336 (1997). Because the ISP rights were to be the sole 8 consideration exchanged for Roots’ $6 million payment to Gap, the fact that the ISP program was 9 intended for trademark protection, not commercial profit, was highly material. Indeed, had Gap
 10 disclosed “the true nature of the ISP program, Roots would never have agreed to pay $6 million for 11 the OP inventory to acquire ISP rights.” Abu Issa Decl. ¶ 7. This information was also uniquely 12 within Gap’s knowledge. The failure to disclose it was fraudulent.

13 Gap’s was also obligated disclose the true purpose of the ISP program because Bell’s
 14 representations about the ISP program were, on their own, misleading. Bell’s failure to disclose
 15 “facts which materially qualify those stated” was fraudulent. Vega v. Jones, Day, Reavis & Pogue,
 16 121 Cal. App. 4th 282, 294 (2004) (internal quotations omitted)

17 VI. The Record Supports Roots’ Equitable Claims (Counts Seven, Eight, and Nine).

18 A. Roots’ Equitable Claims Were Timely Filed.

19 Gap fundamentally misconstrues the events that trigger the running of the limitations period
 20 for Roots’ promissory estoppel and quasi-contract claims. Gap’s contention that the promissory
 21 estoppel claim is time-barred to the extent it is based on promises made prior to June 25, 2005, 22 Defs. Mem. at 11, incorrectly assumes that a promissory estoppel claim accrues immediately when 23 the promise is made. But a promise is only one element of the claim. The plaintiff must also 24 plead: (1) reasonable and foreseeable reliance on the promise; and (2) a resulting injury. See J.W.
 25 Van Hook v. Southern Cal. Workers Alliance, Local 17, 158 Cal. App. 2d 556, 570 (1958). Roots’
 26 promissory estoppel claim did not accrue when Gap made its promises, but rather when Gap
 27 breached the promises, causing injury to Roots. See Chambers v. Kay, 106 Cal. Rptr. 2d 702, 719

1 (citing Budd v. Nixon, 6 Cal. 3d 195, 200-201 (1971)) (“Until the defendant’s conduct causes
 2 damages to the plaintiff, no cause of action has been generated and the period of limitations is not
 3 triggered.”). Thus, the statute of limitations for Roots’ promissory estoppel claim began to run no
 4 earlier than August 10, 2005 – the date that Gap wrongfully terminated its ISP agreement with 5 Gabana and ceased providing ISP merchandise to Roots.

6 “[A] suit for breach of an implied contract, which is the essence of a quantum meruit
 7 claim,” likewise “accrues at the time of the breach.” Kramer v. Thomas, No. CV 05-8381 AG,
 8 2006 WL 4729242, at *14 (C.D. Cal. Sept. 28, 2006). As for the restitution claim, although Gap
 9 received various benefits at Roots’ expense throughout the course of their business relationship, 10 Gap’s obligation to make restitution was not triggered until “the circumstances [were] such that . . .
 11 it [was] unjust for [Gap] to retain [the benefits].” McBride v. Boughton, 123 Cal. App. 4th 379,
 12 389 (2004) (emphasis in original). Thus, Roots’ quantum meruit and quasi-contract/restitution
 13 claims likewise did not accrue before Gap cut off Roots’ supply of first-line Gap merchandise in 14 August, 2005.

15 All three claims were timely filed within two years of the date of accrual.

16 B. Gap Is Equitably Estopped From Invoking The Statute of Limitations
Because It Induced Roots To Refrain From Filing Suit.

17 Gap’s statute of limitations defense fails on the ground of estoppel. Under California law, a 18 defendant who represents that “actionable damage has been or will be repaired, thus making it 19 unnecessary to sue” is estopped from invoking the statute of limitations. Lantzy v. Centex Homes, 20 31 Cal. 4th 363, 383-384 (2003). The record shows that Gap promised that it would compensate
 21 Roots for its injuries, thus making it unnecessary for Roots to file suit. [REDACTED]

22 [REDACTED]

28 161:13-162:4. The record establishes that after Gabana brought its lawsuit, Gap persuaded Roots

1 not to file its own suit, by falsely asserting that it would cure Roots injuries by granting it franchise
 2 rights. Gap is therefore estopped from invoking the statute of limitations as a bar to Roots'
 3 equitable claims.

4 C. Roots' Promissory Estoppel Claim is Supported by the Record.

5 Gap's assertion that the record fails to establish "clear and unambiguous" promises that 6 Gap made to Roots is untenable. Most notably, Gap promised to grant Roots the right to distribute 7 first-line merchandise in the Arabic-speaking countries – a promise Gap breached when it cut-off
 8 Roots' access to ISP merchandise in August 2005.

9 The cases Gap relies on are easily distinguished. In Aguilar v. Int'l Longshoremen's Union,
 10 966 F.2d 443, 446 (9th Cir. 1992), the court held that a union's representation to applicants that 11 "job experience would be considered did not constitute a clear and definite promise that previous . . .
 12 . experience would be the determinative factor . . ." The court's holding that the plaintiffs could 13 not "transform" their "inferences . . . into an enforceable promise," id., has no application to Roots'
 14 claim. The defendant's vague promise in B&O Mfg., Inc. v. Home Depot U.S.A., Inc., No. C 07-
 15 02864 JSW, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 83998, at *16-17 (N.D. Cal. Nov. 1, 2007), "to provide 16 substantial quantities of future business" is far less definite and certain than Gap's promise to grant
 17 Roots ISP – and later franchise – rights for a specific product in a specified territory.

18 D. There Are No Written Agreements Covering The Same Subject Matter As Roots' Quasi-Contract and Promissory Estoppel Claims.

19 There is no written contract governing the rights Roots seeks to enforce in this action.
 20 Roots was not a party to the Gap-Gabana agreements, and it claims no rights under those 21 agreements. The LOU, signed by Gabana and Roots in May 2003, was never implemented and the 22 Gabana-Roots agreements contemplated by the LOU were never executed.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons stated above, the Court should deny Defendants' motion for summary judgment in its entirety.
